

Volunteer

Hemlock Farms resident, Dr. Mortimer Tener, a Rowan University (Glassboro, N.J.) Department of Secondary Education professor, devotes his summer months volunteering at the Developmental Education Services of Monroe County and Pike County Developmental Center, working with special needs population center staff members to help those with needs to gain life skills, to improve his ability as an individual and as an educator to listen, give, learn, and love. Last week he worked with PCDC clients facilitating a Biondo Trust Foundation sponsored tennis and volleyball instructional/educational program designed to help PCDC's developmentally challenged clients develop new motor skills, teamwork, socialization, and a wide range of developmental skills. These skills enable clients to more fully experience activities available to the general population and help develop character and learning skills.
